

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book on “Regional Autonomy and Socio-Economic Development in Indonesia,” which is the first report of a joint study team of seven Indonesians and one Japanese researcher, would not be made published if without the assistance of many institutions and individuals.

First of all, we acknowledge the contribution of the Indonesian Institute of Sciences (Lembaga Ilmu Pengetahuan Indonesia: LIPI) for its permission and sponsorship to this study; then the Institute of Developing Economies (IDE-JETRO) in Chiba for its administrative and financial assistance to the team; the Centre for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) in Jakarta for supplying its facilities, especially its excellent library services and comfortable discussion rooms; and last but not the least, the members of the joint study team for their labor and dedication to this project. In a desire to produce this worth-reading book, the team has conducted seven workshops since September 2002 including two lecture-consultations with external experts on regional autonomy policy. The team likewise attended several conferences, and some even went on field studies in several regions of Indonesia.
