

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the following people, without whom this volume would not have been completed. The deepest appreciation goes to Professor Marcel Fafchamps of Stanford University, my principal adviser for doctoral study, in which this study originated. At Stanford, help and comments from professors Carl Gotsch, Scott Pearson, Pan A. Yotopoulos, Scott D. Rozelle, and Jefferey C. Williams were invaluable. Critical comments and encouragement from friends including Dave Widawsky, Were Omamo, Bob Baulch, Daphne Taylor, Albert Park, Yasu Sawada, Hiroshi Nakamura, and Mushtaq Khan fed the energy to continue this work.

In Pakistan, many individuals gave me their time and support. First mention should go to Dr. Muhammad Jameel Khan, the Director of the Punjab Economic Research Institute (PERI), who introduced me to the survey data and sample villages investigated in this study. I am also grateful to the numerous farmers in the study villages for spending their time freely. A number of professionals provided encouragement and useful suggestions, such as Dr. Sarfraz Khan Qureshi, Dr. Abdul Salam, Dr. Mubarik Ali, Dr. Bashir Ahmad, Dr. R. J. McConnen, and Dr. Khalid Riaz. Special mention should be made to the staff at the PERI for their help in the field, especially, Mr. Shaukat Ali Shahid, Mr. Mahmood Ali Saleem, Mr. Muhammad Sarwar, Mr. Khalid Hussein, and Mr. Muhammad Mustaqeen.

I also thank participants in various seminars for their comments. Besides those at Stanford and at the Institute of Developing Economies (IDE), the comments from seminars at the University of California, Berkeley, the International Food Policy Research Institute, and the Economic Research Institute of Hitotsubashi University were especially helpful.

This work summarizes my recent work conducted at the IDE. Thanks are due to all the staff for their support. I am especially thankful to Dr. Shigemochi Hirashima, ex-IDE professor at Meiji-Gakuin University, for his continuing encouragement and guidance, not only in Japan but also in Pakistan. My sincere thanks go to Mr. Y. Saito for editing this work and to Dr. J. Bartman for correcting my English text. Finally, I would like to thank my wife Mari and my daughter Mizuho for their ongoing support.